

League of Nations' Report on Russian Labor Completed

Findings in Inquiry Seeking to Reveal Truth About Workers Under Soviet Rule To Be Public Soon

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21.—The inquiry into labor conditions in Russia, undertaken by the international labor office of the League of Nations, has been completed, according to an announcement today by the Department of Labor. The findings, prepared under the direction of Dr. G. Pardo, head of the Russian inquiry section of the international labor office, are expected to be made public shortly.

The report is said to have grown out of the suggestion of M. Sokol, Polish government delegate, in January, 1920. "The proposal was not received with enthusiasm," according to the Labor Department's statement, "the governing body shrinking from the idea that the international labor office should, at the very beginning of its existence, embark on an enterprise which was not without inconvenience and danger. The workers' representatives, however, urged that it be adopted, laying particular stress on the consideration that a large portion of the unrest among the working classes was perhaps due to complete ignorance of what had happened in Russia. They called attention to the fact that some people claimed that everything was perfect and that workers who were suffering more and more from economic and social disorder caused by the war were fascinated by the mirage of a Bolshevik paradise.

"In the opinion of the workers' delegates, much of this unrest would vanish if the truth about labor conditions and the working classes in Russia could be discovered."

Composed of five employers, five workers and two government delegates, the commission undertook systematic research work in Paris and London, with supplementary investigations in Switzerland, Sweden, Italy and Germany.

Senators Named to Investigate Campaign Funds Meet Monday

CHICAGO, Aug. 21.—The Senate committee appointed to investigate campaign expenditures will meet here Monday to outline plans, Senator Kenyon, its chairman, announced today. Senators Kenyon, Spencer, Reed and Pomerehne are expected to attend. Senator Edge, the fifth member, is in Europe. The meeting will be held in the same downtown hotel which houses the Republican National Committee.

"I am not able to say what will be done," said Senator Kenyon. "The committee will have a full discussion of plans. No witnesses have been called."
